

Excerpt from Our World of Work The keynote of this text is found in the following paragraph from Cardinal Principles of Secondary Education: Education in a democracy, both within and without the school, should develop in each individual the knowledge, ideals, interests, habits, and powers whereby he will find his place and use that place to shape both himself and society to ever nobler ends. In Our World of Work, the teacher will not find many of the usual statistics and wage tables. They are omitted not only because they tend quickly to become obsolete, but also because they deaden interest and distract the pupils attention from the vastly more attractive and important factors of self-discipline and social adaptation. The text is filled with pictorial illustration and other supplementary aids to the thinking-through process which the pupil must follow to make his study effective. At frequent and regular intervals the pupil is encouraged to analyze the organization and treatment of the various topics so that he may acquire a proper method for his independent studies of occupational opportunities. Guideposts, a Scrapbook, Thinking-Through questions, choice bibliographies, and suggested Field Studies accompany each chapter. Thus the inspiration and counsel of the teacher is supplemented in practical fashion by the course which the text establishes for the pupil.
